TABLE 5: RECIDIVISM

	EFFECTS OF CONVICTIONS
	Do you know “recidivism” in your system?	Can foreign convictions be taken in account?
Austria	Large discretionary power of judges: when sentencing they can aggravate but it’s not a special qualification Special rules for some cases where judges are obliged to take into account recidivism	Principle of “equal treatment” of foreign convictions. Nevertheless, the offence have to be also punishable under national law and the conviction must have been rendered following proceedings that respect article 6 of the ECHR
Belgium	Yes, as an aggravation of the penalty	No. Only as a fact element.
Cyprus	Not during the trial, yes when sentencing	Yes, according to the Convention on the Enforcement of Foreign Sentences and under certain conditions. Same consequences as a national conviction
Czech	Yes, previous conviction ranks among the aggravation circumstances taken into account when sentencing. However, the court is entitled with respect to the character of previous conviction and other aspects not to consider this circumstance as aggravating. Special rules for dangerous recidivist (upper limit of the sentence increases by 1/3)	Yes
Denmark	Large discretionary power of judges: they can aggravate	Yes
Estonia	Yes, in some cases: aggravation of the penalty	No. Only as a fact element
Finland	Large discretionary power of the Court: when sentencing as a aggravation of the penalty	Yes, if foreign conviction has been entered into the criminal records.
France	Yes, depending of different parameters and as an aggravation of the penalty (double)	Yes but only as an element fact
Germany	Large discretionary power of judges, they are not obliged	Yes, except if according to national law the conviction would be delete

EFFECTS OF CONVICTIONS
	Do you know “recidivism” in your system?	Can foreign convictions be taken in account?
Greece	Yes, when calculating the sanction as a mitigating/ aggravating and when issuing or not the suspension of the execution	Yes, EU citizens/ non EU if other agreement.
Hungary	Different rules relating 3 types of recidivism: recidivist/ qualified/ habitual Qualified/ habitual: as a aggravating (increasing by ½, not exceed 15 years)/ not possibility of probation/ more severe rules of the imprisonment	Yes, if the proceeding conducted/ sentenced imposed are in conformity with national law (recognized by a national court)
Ireland	No during the trial, yes when sentencing Rarely as an aggravation but large discretionary power of judges	No, but some exceptions
Italy	Yes, as an aggravating of the penalty (increasing 1/6, 1/3, ½)	Yes, it can be recognized
Latvia	Definition of “Multiplicity of criminal law” which contains different concepts and rules: repetition/ aggregation/ recidivism It could be considered as an constituent element/ aggravating	Yes, if the foreign conviction is enforced in Latvia.
Lithuania	Yes, when sentencing/ deciding execution and commutation of the penalty/ recognising as a dangerous recidivist No imposed any heavier punishment	No
Luxembourg	Yes, as aggravating of the penalty. Different rules depending of gravity offence	Yes For sentences executed abroad, if the offence is also punished in the national law
Malta	Yes, during the trial/ when sentencing as an aggravation	Unclear legislative framework
Nederland	Large discretionary power of judges when sentencing: can take into account when determining the penalty Obligated to consider penalties imposed after the currently prosecuted offence. Recidivism can also be an aggravating circumstance for and an element of certain criminal offences in our Penal Code If felony: increasing 1/3 penalty	Obligated to take in account convictions pronounced for the same offence for which the suspected is prosecuted (ne bis in idem) No special conditions for other offences; they can be taken into consideration in the same way as national convictions. It is not clear whether or not a foreign conviction can prove the element of recidivism in the certain criminal offences mentioned in the other box

EFFECTS OF CONVICTIONS
	Do you know “recidivism” in your system?	Can foreign convictions be taken in account?
Poland	Yes, as a constituent element/ aggravation of the penalty	No answer
Portugal	Yes, different situations and as an aggravation (fixing the minimum increased in 1/3)	Yes, if the offence is also punished in the national law
Slovakia	Yes: when sentencing as an aggravation of the penalty. Special rules for dangerous recidivists.	Yes
Slovenia	Yes	Yes
Spain	Yes, as an aggravation of the penalty When “habitually” as a constituent element
Sweden	Yes, when sentencing/ deciding the execution of the penalty (can influence on the choice of sanctions, number of fines imposed, period of imprisonment, forfeiture of conditional liberty)	Yes
UK	Exceptionally, during trial proceedings Yes, when sentencing as an aggravation	Yes

ANNEX 2

Organisation of a European computerised system for exchanging information on criminal convictions

Note: in this plan, the term "National Authority" designates the authority responsible for the management of national criminal records.

Description

- (1) National authorities “feed” a central database with elements enabling the identification of convicted persons (flow 1 in the above plan). Only the elements enabling the identification of the convicted person (surname, first name, place and date of birth, nationality, and if possible, fingerprints) are communicated, not the content of the criminal record itself. These identifiers are simply alphanumeric. An update mechanism will be foreseen to enable the deletion of obsolete information. Only the Member State which has passed the sentence will “feed” the index. In order to keep the Member State of nationality informed of the sentences passed against one of its nationals in another Member State and to ensure that Member States are still able to obtain the information which is sent to them under the current system, the index could send a specific notification to the Member State of nationality each time a national of this Member State is introduced in the index by another Member State. It will then be up to this Member State to request the appropriate information from the “sentencing” Member State.
- (2) An authority which wishes to know whether a person has a criminal history will consult the database on the basis of the person’s name (flow 2 in the above plan). The database will answer with a simple "hit" and identify in which countries the person has a criminal history (flow 3 in the above plan). The effective operation of this system requires that a conviction be transmitted from one national register only, i.e. the register of the Member State which has passed the sentence.

- (3) Requests for extracts of criminal records are made bilaterally between the authority responsible for criminal records and its counterpart from another Member State, which has been identified as holding information (flow 4 in the above plan). Technically, this request could be generated automatically as soon as a "hit" is identified. These exchanges are structured by creating, within each national authority in charge of the European criminal record, a Criminal Records European Unit (CREU) responsible for these exchanges. Each CREU is dependent on the authority responsible for the management of the national criminal record. In this example, the CREU from country B asks for the extract of the criminal record from the CREU of countries A and C (flow 4 in the above plan), which comply with this request (flow 5 in the above plan). The exchanges between CREUs are supported by the electronic exchange of documents (electronic transmission of scanned documents). In a first phase, the information is transmitted in its national format as is the case currently within the framework of mutual assistance, in accordance with the future Council decision on the exchange of information extracted from the criminal record.⁷
- (4) As soon as a standardised European format, accepted by all the Member States, is established, the CREU of country C will use structured forms (for example by using numerical codes to avoid translation problems), which will enable the CREU of country A to obtain information that it can understand and use with ease.

Advantages

The proposal which has just been described makes it possible to achieve previously identified objectives and constitutes a workable solution both from a legal and technical point of view.

1. Reliable identification of a person having a criminal record. The identification of Member States in which a person has a criminal history is based on a simple and tested mechanism. This mechanism will allow the same degree of reliability for all EU citizens and for third country nationals.
2. Fast and secure exchanges of information. As from the first phase, it will be possible to obtain within a very short time-frame, exhaustive information on the convictions pronounced against a person on EU territory.
3. Exchange of information which is comprehensible and can be used. The creation of a standardised European format, described in the second phase of the proposed solution, will enable end-users to obtain quickly comprehensive information in a European format recognised everywhere. It will moreover reduce considerably the need for translation.
4. Simplicity and system effectiveness. The solution makes it possible on the one hand to avoid interrogating each and every national record at each request (it is the central system which is interrogated instead of the national systems) and, moreover, to limit exchanges to those Member States which have information to communicate by eliminating routine and superfluous requests.

5. Taking into account the need to protect personal data. Most of the data protection issues will remain at national level as each national authority will keep control of its criminal record:
 - only the national authority in charge of the criminal record will be able to add information in the central index;
 - only national authorities will be entitled to send requests for information to the index, after verification that the requesting person or authority has the right to have access to this information.
 - national authorities will transmit the information obtained to the requesting person or authority in accordance with their national legislation. This implies for example that they will not transmit the information obtained if they would not have been able, under their national law, to transmit similar national information to the person or authority (e.g. because the retention period in the criminal record has expired, because it is covered by an amnesty or because this information would not have been given to the requesting person or authority under national law).
6. Limited impact on national legislations. The first phase will not impact radically on national competences and consequently does not require any heavy mechanism to be implemented. The definition of a "standardised European format" raises more complex legal issues which will need to be addressed in a second phase.
7. Limited investments. The re-use of existing infrastructures for information exchanges should limit the necessary investments. It will be enough for each Member State to be connected to the central database (the necessary networks already exist) and to ensure that the central index is updated regularly, in accordance with national law.
