EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This Staff Working Document evaluates the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights (EIDHR) 2014-2020 at its mid-term, covering the period January 2014 to June 2017.

With a budget of EUR 1.33 billion, the EIDHR is the expression of the EU's commitment to support and promote democracy and human rights in third countries, in line with the European Union's policies in these fields. Its general objectives are supporting, developing and consolidating democracy, and enhancing respect for, and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms worldwide. The EIDHR is mainly implemented through civil society organisations.

The main findings of the evaluation are as follows:

At the mid-term of its implementation, the 2014-2020 EIDHR has overall proven to be "fit for purpose". In particular, with its wide and comprehensive scope, the EIDHR was and has remained an enabling, flexible and responsive instrument to protect and promote human rights and democracy worldwide, at international, regional and local levels. With its focus on the most pressing and emerging human rights and democracy challenges, especially in the most difficult environments, it is an instrument that is more than ever relevant to the political priorities of the EU.

Although it is particularly difficult to measure the direct contribution of the instrument to any overall improvement – or absence of deterioration – of the human rights and democracy situation worldwide due to the absence of indicators at instrument level, there is nevertheless evidence at output level that the EIDHR is largely on track to deliver on its objectives and commitments and is already effective in delivering results on each of its specific objectives.

The EIDHR is deemed generally efficient and responsive thanks to a relatively low level of administrative expenditure and in-built flexibility. The latter is however not always used to its full extent at Delegation level. The call for proposals process which is the favoured modality to select projects for funding is found lengthy, burdensome and over-competitive by civil society organisations.

The EIDHR creates space for political and democratic dialogue. The election observation activities and their follow-up play a key role in promoting democratic elections.

The specific features and added value of the EIDHR make it a "niche" instrument, able to operate where the others do not or cannot, and is crucial to human rights work through civil society. In times of decreasing overall funding available to support human rights and democracy worldwide, the EIDHR is able to fill in gaps, add value, and complement support provided by Member States and other development partners.

The findings/conclusions of the evaluation will feed into the reflection on how to improve the implementation of the EIDHR for the remaining period until 2020, and on the future set of External Financing Instruments for the next Multiannual Financial Framework.

1. INTRODUCTION

1.1. Purpose of the evaluation

This Staff Working Document presents the results of the mid-term evaluation of the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights (EIDHR) 2014-2020<sup>1</sup>. The evaluation assesses whether the EIDHR is fit for purpose, based on its performance to-date, to deliver on its objectives of supporting, developing and consolidating democracy in third countries, and enhancing respect for, and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms worldwide<sup>2</sup>. Its purpose is to inform future work on the instrument and its actions. In particular, this evaluation, which is part of a set of ten evaluations covering all the EU External Financing Instruments<sup>3</sup>, informs the Mid-Term Review Report<sup>4</sup>, which draws conclusions across the External Financing Instruments.

This document is largely based on an external evaluation by independent consultants provided in Annex 4.

1.2. Scope of the evaluation

The temporal scope of the evaluation corresponds to the requirements for the Mid-Term Review Report set out in Article 17 of the Common Implementation Regulation. It therefore focuses on the period January 2014 to June 2017. However, as it takes place at mid-term where many of the actions supported under the EIDHR during the evaluation period have only started to be implemented, it is too soon at this stage to measure overall long-term impact on the situation of human rights and democracy worldwide. Therefore the focus of the evaluation, and the assessment of effectiveness in particular, are at the output level.

Nevertheless, since the EIDHR is mainly implemented in centralised management mode under the N+1 rule<sup>5</sup>, all foreseen actions under the 2014 and 2015 Annual Action Programmes, as well as most of the actions under the 2016-2017 Multiannual Action Programme, have already been contracted with partners and entered into the implementation phase. Some of these actions have even already been closed. The availability of both aggregated and disaggregated data has therefore been sufficient to focus on the current EIDHR, without having recourse to data from the previous EIDHR (2007-2013), except for comparison purposes.

The countries covered under the evaluation are those eligible under the EIDHR Regulation, i.e. any country outside the European Union<sup>6</sup>.

In accordance with the EU Better Regulation Guidelines<sup>7</sup>, the following evaluation criteria are used: relevance, effectiveness, efficiency, coherence, and EU added value.

2. BACKGROUND OF THE INITIATIVE

The External Financing Instruments take a major part of the Multiannual financial framework<sup>8</sup> – Heading IV Global Europe, which provides the EU with the tools necessary to reinforce its role on the world stage and to ensure that it is able to live up to its ambitions in promoting its interests and values such as democracy, human rights, peace, solidarity, stability and poverty reduction and to help safeguard global public goods.

Adopted in early 2014, the External Financing Instruments were designed to facilitate and support policy implementation, with the intention of remaining relevant until the end of 2020, thereby enabling the EU to implement external action policy as needed within the defined principles and objectives.

the expression of the EU's commitment to support and promote democracy and human rights in third countries<sup>10</sup>. Its two general objectives, as defined in Article 1 of the EIDHR Regulation, are: (1) supporting, developing and consolidating democracy in third countries, by enhancing participatory and representative democracy, strengthening the overall democratic cycle, in particular by reinforcing an active role for civil society within this cycle, and the rule of law, and improving the reliability of electoral processes, in particular by means of EU Electoral Observation Missions; (2) enhancing respect for, and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, as proclaimed in the UN Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international and regional human rights instruments, and strengthening their protection, promotion, implementation and monitoring, mainly through support to relevant civil society organisations, human rights defenders and victims of repression and abuse.

The EIDHR is working mainly with and in support of civil society and its actions<sup>11</sup>. It is established to contribute to the implementation of the European Union's policies relating to human rights and democracy, including the Strategic Framework on Human Rights and Democracy and the 2012-2014 Action<sup>12</sup> as well as the 2015-2019 Action Plan<sup>13</sup>. Its budget for the period 2014-2020 is EUR 1,332,752,000.

The 2011 Impact Assessment accompanying the renewal of the EIDHR<sup>14</sup> as well as other evaluations at instrument level<sup>15</sup> or projects level revealed several strengths:

- (i) independence of action, allowing working without the need for government consent, which is a critical feature especially in the sensitive areas of democracy and human rights;
- (ii) flexibility and capacity to timely respond to changing circumstances, in complementarity to geographic and other thematic instruments;
- (iii) intervention in the most difficult situations and contexts where human rights and fundamental freedoms are at greater risk. In order to protect the physical safety of activists and others whose lives may be seriously endangered, the details of such projects may not be made public.

The 2011 Impact Assessment also concluded that the budget of the EIDHR was too limited given its vast geographical and thematic scope. The EIDHR was and still is one of the smallest of the existing EU external financing instruments and only represents 1% of the overall EU Official Development Assistance.

The main lessons incorporated into the 2014-2020 Regulation at the time of its design led to a better definition of the EIDHR's specific objectives with respect to the protection of human rights and support of democratic processes, including in particular:

- (i) a stronger focus on the most difficult countries and emergency situations where human rights and human rights defenders are most in danger;
- (ii) a stronger accent on the role of civil society, with a focus on their participation in decision making processes as the basis for active citizenship;
- (iii) a stronger emphasis on gender equality and support to rights of vulnerable groups (national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities, lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and inter-sex persons (LGBTI), indigenous peoples, persons affected by caste-based discrimination, etc.);
- (iv) a stronger emphasis on economic, social and cultural rights;
- (v) a commitment to better follow up EU Electoral Observation Missions' recommendations and improve democratic and electoral processes.

Compared to the 2007-2013 EIDHR, the 2014-2020 EIDHR increased approximately by 21% in budget<sup>16</sup> and has been adjusted to address new challenges, to be more strategic in its focus and procedurally easier to use, thus enabling the EU to provide concrete support to contribute to the development of thriving civil societies and their specific role as key actors for positive change in support of human rights and democracy. This includes increasing the EU's capacity to react promptly to human rights emergencies and to provide more support to international and regional human rights protection mechanisms.

Underlying this set of actions is the principle of complementarity and coherence with the wider set of external financing instruments, as enshrined in the preamble of the EIDHR Regulation<sup>17</sup>. In accordance with the Lisbon Treaty, the programmes and policies promoted by the EIDHR must be coherent with other initiatives for external action. Figure 1 below sets out how the EIDHR fits into the wider set of instruments and policies in the fields of democracy and human rights.

2.1. Structure

The European Union's strategic orientation in delivering on the purpose of the EIDHR is based on five interlinked objectives, which are set out in Annex 1 to the Regulation as follows:

- Specific Objective 1 - Support to human rights and human rights defenders in situations where they are most at risk;
- Specific Objective 2 - Support to other priorities of the Union in the field of human rights;
- Specific Objective 3 - Support to democracy;
- Specific Objective 4 - EU Election Observation Missions (EOMs);
- Specific Objective 5 - Support to targeted key actors and processes, including international and regional human rights instruments and mechanisms.

To achieve these objectives, the EIDHR has provided a rather broad variety of interventions:

- Grants to civil society and human rights defenders in third countries under the Country Based Support Scheme (CBSS) using the standard call for proposals process managed by the EU Delegations.
- 'Global' calls for proposals/grants to civil society organisations to support specific human rights priorities.

- Emergency grants to human rights defenders at risk under the EIDHR Emergency Fund and ProtectDefenders.eu.
- Confidential grants under the Human Rights Crisis Facility to civil society and human rights defenders where it is impossible for these to be supported without exposing them to risk or violating rules in their countries.
- Targeted actions identified in the EIDHR Annual Action Programmes to support key actors (for example, the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, the International Criminal Court or the National Human Rights Institutions) and support to the media, Parliaments and political parties.
- Service contracts with specific service providers, including for the conducting of the EU election observation missions and related activities.

2.2. Baseline

As this is a mid-term evaluation, the baseline has been set at January 2014 when the EIDHR 2014-2020 was adopted. Therefore the evaluation compares, to the extent possible, the situation on 1 January 2014 (Common Implementation Regulation, Article 17.3)<sup>18</sup> with the current situation. For some evaluation criteria, where data is unavailable for this reference date, earlier baselines have been used, as described later in this document (see sections 5.2 and 5.3 on effectiveness and efficiency), considering that the main objectives of the instrument have not been changed from the former to the current EIDHR.

The EIDHR Regulation does not include any strategic and operational indicators to measure results.

3. METHOD

This evaluation is supported by an external evaluation carried out from July 2016 to May 2017<sup>19</sup>. The external evaluation of the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights (EIDHR) was managed by an Inter-service Steering Group through the following steps: an inception report (which explained how the evaluation design would deliver the information required); a desk report (providing initial responses to evaluation questions); visits to Israel, Palestine, Peru and Uganda to meet key interlocutors to obtain first-hand view in-country; country desk studies on Pakistan and Russia; a survey to EU Delegations covering all instruments; an Open Public Consultation on the draft report which comprised a 12-week online survey and targeted meetings with Member States in March 2017; and a final report. The external evaluation also took into account various studies and reports, including special reports of the Court of Auditors<sup>20</sup> and the results of a specific Evaluation of EU Election Observation Activities<sup>21</sup> managed by the Foreign Policy Instruments service of the Commission (FPI) in cooperation with the European External Action Service (EEAS).

The external evaluation used a non-experimental methodology. This was based on the reconstructed logic of intervention for the EIDHR and testing the extent to which in practice this intervention logic has worked as intended. The process of the external evaluation has been robust and the evidence reasonably solid, despite the fact that instrument-level strategic and operational indicators to measure results were not yet fully in place, which made measuring effectiveness and results difficult during the consultation phase.

The present evaluation equally draws from the experience and sound judgement of Commission services in charge of managing the EIDHR, in consultation with the EEAS which is in the lead for its programming<sup>22</sup>. It is based on several external and internal sources of information:

<sup>22</sup> Programming is the stage where the priorities of EU assistance to a partner country, region or theme are defined.

- structured consultations, ad hoc meetings and near daily contacts at Headquarters and Delegation level with the main stakeholders concerned by the instrument: human rights defenders, international and local civil society organisations, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), the International Criminal Court, regional human rights mechanisms, national human rights institutions, national electoral bodies, etc.;
- the data<sup>23</sup> on the growing number of requests for support under the EIDHR Emergency Fund for human rights defenders at risk which reflect the trends of violence, criminalisation, harassment and smearing campaigns against human rights defenders worldwide also measured by specialised international non-governmental organisations (NGOs);
- the implementation and monitoring reports of EIDHR-funded projects received and reviewed by the Directorate General for International Cooperation and Development on a regular basis, including implementation issues in countries where restrictive laws and practices (such as freezing of accounts) have been passed which hinder the proper implementation of foreseen activities.

4. IMPLEMENTATION STATE OF PLAY

This section looks at the progress made in implementing the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights (EIDHR) since 2014 and the monitoring systems used to measure progress. In line with being an instrument-level evaluation, the focus has been kept as much as possible on the programming rather than action level.

4.1. Programming implementation

The EIDHR has been implemented in an efficient manner since 2014. A Multiannual Indicative Programme (MIP) has been adopted for the period 2014-2017<sup>24</sup>. While a Special Measure<sup>25</sup> and an Annual Action Programme<sup>26</sup> framed the initiatives to be implemented respectively for 2014 and 2015, a Multiannual Action Programme (MAAP) established the work programme for years 2016 and 2017<sup>27</sup>. 100% of the EIDHR budget for 2014-2017 has been committed. There have been no specific delays or problems so far in execution.

Since 2014, the EIDHR programmes maintained the instrument's worldwide coverage and their actions can be regrouped in five axes of work in line with the overall objectives of the EIDHR Regulation:

1. reinforcing the EU's capacity to intervene in the short-, medium- and long-term, including to address the most difficult situations and to react quickly to human rights emergencies;
2. supporting local civil society organisations at grassroots level, including in remote areas;
3. launching capacity building programmes in the area of democracy, human rights, and human rights education;
4. contributing to increasing transparency and trust in the electoral process by means of Electoral Observation Missions (EOMs);
5. strengthening key international and regional multilateral actors.

In operational terms, this has notably translated into a focus on:

- supporting individual human rights defenders in emergency situations under the EIDHR Emergency Fund<sup>28</sup> and the EU human rights defenders mechanism ProtectDefenders.eu<sup>29</sup>;

<sup>28</sup> EIDHR Emergency Fund awards urgent small grants of up to EUR 10 000 to HRDs or CSOs at imminent risk, including where the latter are not registered and without the need for co-funding.

- addressing in a flexible and reactive way under the EIDHR Human Rights Crises Facility<sup>30</sup>, countries and urgent situations where human rights and fundamental freedoms are most at risk and where disrespect for those rights and freedoms is particularly pronounced and systematic;
- launching annual global calls for proposals covering five main EU priorities in the field of human rights in parallel, allowing for a longer-term response in each priority area: (i) Human rights and their defenders where they are the most at risk, (ii) Human Dignity, (iii) Economic, Social and Cultural rights, (iv) anti-discrimination and (v) other priorities planned in the multi-annual programming or linked to new unforeseen areas;
- supporting participatory and representative democracy, through civic education, enhancing the role of civil society and ordinary citizens in the democratic process, and supporting fundamental freedoms and access to information;
- continuing global programmes in the above areas, as well as launching a call for proposals on promoting women and youth in political party systems;
- steadily supporting key international actors such as the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the International Criminal Court;
- initiating support to networks of National Human Rights Institutions;
- continuing the EU support to the Master of Human Rights and Democratisation as well as the launching of other targeted initiatives;
- deploying, upon invitation of partner countries, EU Election Observation Missions, Election Expert Missions and Election Follow-Up Missions with robust principles and methodology of electoral observation developed on the basis of over two decades of operational experience with a view to encouraging professionalism and transparency in electoral management, discouraging irregularities and abuse, and inspiring public confidence in the electoral processes.

4.2. Monitoring and evaluation systems

In the EIDHR Regulation, no specific monitoring or evaluation system was mentioned for the purpose of measuring its overall performance (e.g. its flexibility and complementarity with other instruments). Neither was an intervention logic established at the time the instrument was adopted which would have shown the external and internal assumptions on which it was based, thus making it easier to measure changes.

Furthermore, the objectives of the EIDHR lend themselves more to qualitative than to quantitative assessment. The changes encouraged by EIDHR activities are often related

<sup>29</sup> ProtectDefenders.eu is a three-year project financed under the EIDHR (EUR 15 million) to implement the EU Human Rights Defenders mechanism, established to protect defenders at high risk and facing the most difficult situations worldwide. It is led by a consortium of 12 NGOs active in the field of human rights.

<sup>30</sup> EIDHR Human Rights Crises Facility grants direct awards up to 1 MEUR to address the most difficult human rights situations and/or when a call for proposals is inappropriate. Since 2014, the allocation has been EUR 3.5 million annually.

to legislation, practices and attitudes that do not easily get measured through quantitative analysis, especially not in the short term. In a very fluid environment where the EIDHR works through civil society organisations, the assessment of EIDHR's results should be seen more in terms of contribution than in terms of direct and attributable effect.

The EU International Cooperation and Development Results Framework created in 2015<sup>31</sup> defines quantitative indicators for the collection, aggregation and presentation of three types of result data: (level 1) wider development progress made by partner countries (impact-level indicators); (level 2) partner country results to which the EU contributed through EU-funded projects; (level 3) the European Commission's own organisational performance in respect to international cooperation and development.

In terms of level 2 (outcome and output indicators), it is possible to aggregate these indicators at instrument level; however they have their limitations for the purpose of this evaluation. They only report results from projects that have closed from mid-2013 to mid-2016. The results are therefore mostly coming from projects implemented under the previous EIDHR and will not, for the time being, show the performance of the current instrument.

The following monitoring tools have been employed:

What	Who	When	Why
Results Orientated Monitoring	Managed by HQ; executed by external ROM experts in consultation with EU Delegations	Once in a lifetime up to once a year during the implementation phase; usually organised in form of an annual mission to a country	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Provide recommendations for project management;</li> <li>• Gives overview of EC aid portfolio performance,</li> <li>• Contributes to lessons learned (via meta-analysis)</li> </ul>

5. RESPONSES TO THE EVALUATION QUESTIONS

In line both with the Better Regulation Guidelines on evaluations introduced by the Commission in 2015<sup>32</sup>, and the requirements of the Common Implementing Regulation (CIR)<sup>33</sup>, the main assessment criteria are: relevance; effectiveness; efficiency; coherence, EU added value, consistency, complementarity and synergies; and leverage.

5.1. Relevance

To what extent do the overall objectives (EIDHR Regulation, Article 1), the specific objectives and priorities (EIDHR Regulation, Annex) and the design of the EIDHR respond to: (i) EU priorities and beneficiary needs identified at the time the instrument was adopted (2014)? (ii) Current EU priorities and beneficiary needs, given the evolving challenges and priorities in the international context (mid-2017)?

With its wide and comprehensive scope defined in Article 2, the EIDHR was conceived to be an enabling, flexible and responsive instrument to protect and promote human rights and democracy worldwide. As attested in the external evaluation report, its programming and implementation so far have been fully in line with this objective, with the EIDHR having been able to address both well-identified and emerging challenges, even in the most difficult environments.

The instrument is rooted in the EU's approach according to which democracy is the only political regime where human rights can be fulfilled. As the external evaluation states, the way in which the two general objectives of the instrument (human rights and democracy) have been delineated in the specific objectives has improved the coherence and ability to respond to human rights and democracy challenges.<sup>34</sup> This in turn increases the relevance of the EU's response and addresses the main problems noted during the impact assessment of the previous EIDHR<sup>35</sup>.

In particular, with its in-built flexibilities and specific features<sup>36</sup> as well as increasing focus on the protection of human rights defenders, the EIDHR has been able to increase focus on countering the phenomenon commonly called "shrinking space of civil society"<sup>37</sup> and the criminalisation of human rights defenders. Despite increasing <sup>36</sup> Such as the ability to operate without government's consent, possibilities for direct award of grants in the most difficult human rights situations as well as to guarantee confidentiality of funding when required.

<sup>37</sup> Civil Society Organisations in many countries have been experiencing a shrinking space in which they cannot operate freely. A number of governments interpret the role of civil society organisations in a more restrictive way, limiting their input in policy-making and curbing freedom of speech and opinion. Other governments have led efforts to bar, restrain, or control the work of civil society. Restrictive laws have emerged, imposing arbitrary procedures for the registration of associations or restrictions to their funding, in particular from foreign sources. Harassment of international and domestic NGOs is also increasing restrictions hampering the emergence, development and protection of civil society, the EIDHR has continued supporting independent and active local civil society organisations as indispensable counterweights to public authorities as well as agents of democratic change and sustainable development. By liaising and exchanging information with domestic observers, EU Electoral Observation Missions (EOM) recognise the importance of local civil society organisations to actively engage in election process, including through domestic observation<sup>38</sup>. Hence, the local civil society can benefit from the EOM's presence. Elections are key moments in a country's democratic cycle and election observation can help identifying weaknesses and opportunities for improvement of the electoral process, thus contributing to the promotion of democracy in partner countries and inclusive development.

The external evaluation demonstrates<sup>39</sup> that the EIDHR is already contributing to efforts for achieving the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals of the 2030 Agenda adopted in September 2015.<sup>40</sup> Specifically, with its focus on human rights, gender equality, vulnerable groups, economic, social and cultural rights, and the inclusion of environmental human rights defenders, the EIDHR is already contributing to achieving the Sustainable Development Goals 1-8, 10 and 12-16.

Since 2014, the EIDHR has coherently reflected and contributed to implementing EU policies on human rights and democracy, notably the 2015-2019 EU Action Plan on Democracy and Human rights<sup>41</sup>, contributing to its concrete implementation<sup>42</sup>.

Furthermore, by explicitly recognising that democracy, human rights, the rule of law and good governance on the one hand, and inclusive and sustainable development on the other are inextricably linked and mutually reinforcing, the EIDHR is in line with the new European Consensus on Development<sup>43</sup> adopted in June 2017 which makes democracy, rule of law, human rights, gender equality, and good governance the principles and values guiding EU development action as well as key elements of its concrete response throughout the 5 pillars<sup>44</sup> of the Consensus, especially under People and Peace. The acknowledgment in the new Consensus<sup>45</sup> of the importance of a rights-based approach to development (RBA) validates the role played by the EIDHR in developing the EU RBA methodology and training<sup>46</sup> and its contribution to better integrating human rights as a goal and a means into the other external financing instruments.

EU Delegations have mostly implemented their country specific allocations, i.e. the Country-Based Support Scheme (CBSS), based on consultations with local civil society and priorities agreed in their locally adopted Strategies, allowing for a strong alignment of the instrument with both the country-based challenges and the EU policy priorities at local level.

5.2. Effectiveness

To what extent does the EIDHR deliver results against the instrument's objectives, and specific EU priorities?

Measuring effectiveness of EIDHR at instrument level has faced a number of challenges. As already mentioned in section 4.2., activities in the fields of democracy and human rights lend themselves more to qualitative than to quantitative assessment and face problems of attribution. Therefore, it is particularly difficult to measure the direct contribution of the instrument to overall improvement – or absence of deterioration – of the human rights and democracy situation worldwide. Lastly, the fact that a specific intervention logic and strategic and operational indicators to measure results were not in place at instrument level in 2014 has made it difficult to measure precisely the effectiveness of the EIDHR.<sup>47</sup>

At output level, however, there is evidence that the EIDHR is already effectively delivering results on each of its specific objectives:

- Specific objective 1: Overall, there has been a significant increase in financial support dedicated to human rights and human rights defenders in situations where they are most at risk<sup>48</sup>. The external evaluation pays notably tribute to the effectiveness and the responsiveness of the support to human rights defenders at risk under the EIDHR Emergency Fund and the grant to ProtectDefenders.eu, with each awarded grant potentially saving a life and/or allowing supported human rights defenders to continue to work on democracy and human rights issues in their home countries. This can be considered as an invaluable 'value for money' compared to the very small 'investment' (i.e. up to EUR 10,000) per defender supported.<sup>49</sup>
- Specific objective 2: The support to other human rights priorities<sup>50</sup> has also been considerable<sup>51</sup>, continuing EIDHR support in areas where it is one of the only

<sup>50</sup> Following priority areas have been defined: (i) Human rights and their defenders where they are the most at risk, (ii) Human Dignity, (iii) Economic, Social and Cultural rights, (iv) anti-discrimination and (v) other priorities planned in the multi-annual programming or linked to new unforeseen areas.

instruments to intervene (e.g. fight against torture and the death penalty), moving forward on the principles of interdependence and inter-relatedness of rights, and reinvigorating focus on economic, social and cultural rights.

- Specific objective 3: Support has concentrated on the involvement of civil society in the democratic cycle, including domestic observation and protections of fundamental freedoms, as well as more general civic education. Support to domestic accountability has also increased, recognising that issues of accountability and transparency are not restricted to electoral periods. Parliamentary strengthening activities, and a global call for proposals on political parties focusing on women and youth, aim to drive political participation and representation. Global targeted actions on (i) citizens observers and accountability and (ii) freedom of expression and media have augmented the activities at country level.
- Specific objective 4: Even though measuring the effectiveness of election observation is a challenge – primarily as it is impossible to link the success, failure or quality of an election process to any single factor – the external evaluators found evidence that election observation is effective in improving the reliability of electoral processes and that the follow-up of EOMs' recommendations has improved. It is also believed that the presence of observers on the ground contributes to reducing the possibility of election-related violence and tampering with results.<sup>52</sup> The recently completed Evaluation of EU Election Observation Activities (July 2016 – January 2017<sup>53</sup>) concludes that EU election observation activities are judged to be effective in all evaluation question areas identified as relevant to effectiveness and that clear signs of impact were found during the evaluation.
- Specific objective 5: Funding targeted to some of the key actors and processes for the international, regional and national protection of human rights (e.g. International Criminal Court or National Human Rights Institutes) has increased under the current EIDHR and has allowed critical actors to continue operating despite the current challenges to multilateralism (e.g International Criminal Court or the United Nations system).

Thanks to the flexibility provided to the instrument and its particular focus on situations where human rights are most at risk (i.e Specific objective 1), the EIDHR has been able to respond to the requirement of the recital 18 of the EIDHR Regulation which states that ‘the Union should be able to respond in a flexible and timely manner’.

In contributions received during the Open Public Consultation, some concerns were raised regarding the possibly limited impact of the instrument given its wide thematic and geographical scope (more than 110 countries covered) and the relatively small size of its budget. The external evaluation however finds that with relatively small funding EIDHR achieves important results, with special mention to be given to the effectiveness and value for money of support to human rights defenders. In addition, the instrument's worldwide mandate and broad scope appropriately reflect the universality and indivisibility of human rights and limiting the geographical coverage would be against the nature of the instrument. Furthermore, the level of economic development of 'graduated'<sup>54</sup> countries is not necessarily in line with their track record in terms of democracy and human rights and it has therefore been correct to remain engaged in graduated countries, especially as the EIDHR is one of the very few instruments available to EU Delegations to maintain support to civil society. The EIDHR also allows operating in those countries where human rights, democracy, governance or rule of law are not included as sectors of concentration of EU bilateral assistance, or where no bilateral programmes exist. Despite relatively small country allocations, the EIDHR has been used to provide support to key human rights and democracy issues, that coupled with an increased level of political dialogue and diplomacy, thus not only filling in the 'gap' but also having a multiplier effect. Thus had the geographic coverage or scope been narrowed down, the effectiveness of the instrument would have decreased.

https://eeas.europa.eu/headquarters/headquarters-homepage/25845/evaluation-eu-election-observation-activities\_ro

5.3. Efficiency

To what extent is the EIDHR delivering efficiently?

The relatively low and stable level of administrative expenditure of the EIDHR (ca. 7.5% of overall budget on average over the 2007-2017 period<sup>55</sup>) makes it an efficient instrument compared to the volume of funds to be managed overall.

The external evaluation deems also its implementation efficient with an increased size of grants (as compared to the previous EIDHR) coupled with an increased use of "sub-granting" to reach out to smaller civil society organisations at grassroots level. The disbursement rate (time taken from commitment to first payment to beneficiaries) and absorption rate (time taken from commitment to last payment to beneficiaries) since 2014 is also faster compared to the previous EIDHR as well as other external financing instruments.

Implementation modalities foreseen in the Common Implementing Regulation (CIR), whether specific to the EIDHR or applicable to all external financing instruments, have contributed to efficiently implement the instrument.

The 2014 EIDHR Annual Action Programme was adopted as a "special measure" allowing for support to be provided without a gap between the end of the previous Regulation on 31 December 2013 and the adoption of the 2014-2017 Multiannual Indicative Programme a few months later. The possibility offered by the CIR to use the multi-annual programming approach has successfully been implemented for the 2016-2017 Multiannual Action Programme (MAAP). Indeed, the EIDHR is to a large degree implemented through recurrent actions that are carried on from year to year<sup>56</sup>. Adopting the actions for the 2016-2017 as soon as in December 2015 reduced transaction costs and improved planning, transparency and predictability of funds and themes for the concerned stakeholders and the Delegations (e.g. allowing them to pool funds of two to three budget years to rationalise the local calls for proposals and enhance complementarity and coherence with the 'Civil society organisations and local authorities' (CSO/LA) programme of the Development Cooperation Instrument (DCI) which also has a MAAP).

The provisions allowing to award grants without calls for proposals and without the need for co-funding for low-value grants (for example to support human rights defenders at risk), or in declared crisis situation or, a new feature since 2014, in "countries or situations where there is a serious lack of fundamental freedoms, where human security is most at risk or where human rights organisations and defenders operate under the most difficult conditions"<sup>57</sup> have all been used when necessary to respond to urgent situations on the ground. This increased flexibility has allowed the Commission to finance crucial projects of up to EUR 1 million and assist civil society organisations and human rights defenders at risk in a much reduced time frame through the EIDHR Human Rights Crises Facility<sup>58</sup>.

The possibility in the CIR for grants to be provided to entities without legal personality and, in exceptional and duly justified cases, any other body or actor when this is necessary to achieve the objectives of the EIDHR<sup>59</sup> has been used under the EIDHR to somehow counter the effects of restrictive legislations on the registration or foreign funding of NGOs in numerous countries worldwide. It is also possible to consider as "local" civil society organisations registered outside a given country but whose statutes demonstrate that their activities actually relate to that country. However, not all Delegations are aware of these possibilities, which are now routinely part of the EIDHR global calls for proposals, or are not using them to the fullest extent, which can be addressed through greater outreach to EU Delegations.

Finally, the call for proposals process, which is the default modality for awarding grants pursuant to the EU Financial Regulation<sup>60</sup>, remains a lengthy, complex, burdensome and over-competitive<sup>61</sup>, with a lower success rate of local organisations and a very low ratio of selected projects compared to the applications received. To somehow counter these well-known limitations, the provision for 'financial support to third parties' has been used to allow larger national and international civil society organisations to sub-grant to both registered and unregistered small, grassroots civil society organisations and individual defenders at risk, or where it might be otherwise difficult for them to secure funding because of a restrictive environment.

5.4. Added Value

To what extent does the EIDHR add value compared to interventions by Member States or other key donors?

One of the critical assumptions underlying the EIDHR is that its action adds value to the support to democracy and human rights provided by EU Member States and other major development partners. First of all, the Commission is the only development partner to combine support to human rights and democracy so comprehensively in its policies and priorities<sup>62</sup> (including beyond the EIDHR), and it is by far the biggest donor when it comes to human rights in particular<sup>63</sup>.

With more financial means than any Member State has specifically dedicated for human rights and democracy<sup>64</sup>, the EIDHR has a worldwide scope (unlike Member States that focus more and more their development assistance to least developed countries) and a more holistic approach to democracy and human rights than most UN agencies<sup>65</sup>. The wide thematic scope of the instrument allows it to cover specific issues such as the fight against the death penalty or election observation, which are practically not covered by Member States. This is also the case when it comes to more sensitive human rights issues and defenders at risk.<sup>66</sup> In this latter case, the action of the Commission through the Emergency Fund for human rights defenders at risk has been built on close cooperation with Member States: typically, in case of an urgent temporary relocation to Europe, the Member State would process a visa while the Commission would provide the flight ticket and relocation costs.

The presence of Electoral Observation Missions (EOMs) can add value to the electoral processes inter alia through constructive engagement with national institutions and civil society organisations, and by enhancing and complementing democratisation efforts by Delegations and Member States, including through follow-up efforts to EOM recommendations<sup>67</sup>. EOMs are deployed using credible methodology,<sup>68</sup> based on a long-term observation, country-wide coverage and comprehensive assessment of the electoral process. Part of this methodology requires that EOMs are deployed following the recommendations of Exploratory Missions which assess the potential usefulness and feasibility of EOMs.

The EIDHR has thus been able to fill in gaps and add value to support provided by Member States and other development partners.

5.5. Coherence, consistency, complementarity and synergies

To what extent does the EIDHR facilitate coherence, consistency, complementarity and synergies vis-à-vis other external financing instruments?

Compared to the 2007-2013 EIDHR, the current EIDHR has improved its internal coherence and consistency, primarily thanks to the clear definition of the five specific objectives which has helped address the main problems identified, allowing to better focus on the most vulnerable groups and on the most pressing and emerging human rights and democracy challenges.<sup>69</sup>

The Common Implementing Regulation explains that actions must complement other tools, and make the most efficient use of available resources. The EIDHR presents several unique features that facilitate coherence, consistency, complementarity and synergies vis-à-vis other external financing instruments.

Contrary to the geographical instruments that generally work in close cooperation with partner countries to undertake structural reforms at national level (through mutually agreed programmes), the EIDHR provides support to civil society without the approval of the governments and/or other public authorities of third countries to foster democratic change and reinforce human rights from within the societies. This feature, particularly critical in the sensitive areas of democracy and human rights, enables action in the most difficult situations, creating synergies and complementarity where geographical instruments are unable to act as well as in countries where there is no bilateral assistance programme<sup>70</sup>. The EIDHR has also started since 2014 to support networks of National Human Rights Institutions, which are by statute independent from the government, to reinforce their capacities in promoting and protecting human rights at national, regional and global levels.

The EIDHR is the only EU external financial instrument that provides direct support to electoral observation. This is the only component of the instrument, under Specific Objective 4, that operates upon invitation of partner governments. However, when deployed, Electoral Observation Missions (EOMs) are independent and provide an informed and factual assessment of an election process. The independence of EOMs is guaranteed by Memorandum of Understanding signed with the host country which ensures unimpeded access to all election stakeholders, freedom of movement and non-interference in activities and statements of EOMs.

On electoral assistance<sup>71</sup>, the EIDHR provides support to local civil society for domestic observation, while cooperation through geographic instruments, informed by the EOM recommendations, typically works on reinforcing the capacities of electoral management bodies (e.g. in Jordan, Nepal). Through this synergy among different instruments, electoral assistance is tailored towards implementing support strategies throughout the entire electoral cycle, aiming to improve electoral processes and strengthen implementing capacities of national stakeholders.

Other geographic or thematic programmes, such as the CSO-LA thematic programme of the Development Cooperation Instrument<sup>72</sup> or the Civil Society Facility of the European <sup>71</sup> Electoral assistance consists of "building, in the recipient country, sustainable and cost-effective institutional capacity to organize democratic elections which have the full confidence of contesting parties, candidates and the electorate, whilst reducing the potential for election-related violence. Electoral assistance must also help foster national and local ownership throughout the electoral cycle, including in the pre- and post-electoral phases.", EC-UNDP Electoral Assistance Guidelines (April 2016)

<sup>72</sup> https://ec.europa.eu/europeaid/how/finance/dci\_en.htm\_en

Neighbourhood Instrument,<sup>73</sup> also aim at supporting civil society in partner countries. Beyond this similarity of actors supported, the differences between the two programmes ensure their complementarity and synergies. The CSO/LA programme aims at strengthening civil society organisations as actors of governance, supporting their work at grassroots level, in particular regarding their participation, enabling environment and capacity to act. The EIDHR does not only have an immediate rapid reaction focus to the most pressing human rights issues; it also aims at building local civil society organisations' resilience by reinforcing their monitoring and advocacy capacities.

The EIDHR is also complementary to crisis-related actions. The external evaluation found that while the Instrument Contributing to Stability and Peace remains the primary EU instrument to respond to crises and emergency, the EIDHR has been effective in providing support in crisis and emergency situations. This has been particularly thanks to its worldwide coverage and the flexibility provisions, in particular the waiver for the need for co-financing in human rights crisis.<sup>74</sup>

5.6. Leverage

To what extent has the EIDHR leveraged political or policy engagement?

The external evaluation brings evidence that the EIDHR creates (or recreates) space for political and policy engagement with civil society by giving it means to monitor and denounce human rights violations and to advocate and lobby for policy reforms at national level.<sup>75</sup> Almost all EIDHR-funded projects contain at least some elements of awareness-raising, advocacy and lobbying at global, national and/or local levels. As an example, ProtectDefenders.eu includes awareness-raising and advocacy on the issues faced by human rights defenders. In addition, the urgent temporary relocation of human rights defenders in danger not only can save their lives, but most often also allows them to continue their fight for human rights and fundamental freedoms through other means from abroad, and build their capacities to be even more effective when they return to their countries.

The existence of consultation processes with civil society organisations – both at Headquarters and Delegation levels – is an additional EIDHR's feature. For example, the EIDHR has strengthened civil society involvement in preparing for, and following up on the formal EU human rights dialogues with partner countries through, for example, mobilising expertise and civil society input through the organisation of civil society seminars at local and regional level<sup>76</sup>. Civil society organisations are also key partners for EOMs, being involved in citizen observer activities and in contributing to, as well as implementing EOMs' recommendations. The EOM reports can also add weight to existing specific recommendations, and thus assist civil society organisations in their overall democratisation efforts.

EIDHR projects also complement other tools, which are used to implement EU policies on democracy and human rights. This is notably the case as far as the EU's external trade policy is concerned, with the financing under the EIDHR of civil society and social partners' actions to monitor that the countries currently benefitting from the EU's Generalised Scheme of Preferences<sup>77</sup> (GSP+) meet their commitments to ratify and effectively implement core international conventions relating to human and labour rights, environment and good governance.

Another important aspect when addressing the leverage of the instrument is its ability to create space for dialogue on democratic governance issues with governments in partner countries. As demonstrated by the external evaluation<sup>78</sup>, the EOM findings and recommendations also create space for diplomacy and dialogue on electoral reform (e.g. Lebanon and Pakistan<sup>79</sup>) and have led to significant legislative and administrative changes in several partner countries (e.g. Cambodia and Honduras<sup>80</sup>). The brochure "Beyond Election day: Best practices for follow-up to EU Elections observation missions"<sup>81</sup>, launched in June 2017, highlights best practices for leveraging EOM's recommendations, notably through political dialogue and democracy support activities and have led to reform in several partner countries.

<sup>77</sup> The Special Incentive Arrangement for Sustainable Development and Good Governance (GSP+) grants full removal of EU customs tariffs on over 66% of product tariff lines while helping developing countries manage the new responsibilities that come from ratifying and implementing 27 core international conventions on human and labour rights, environmental protection and good governance.

6. CONCLUSIONS

1. At the mid-term of its implementation, the 2014-2020 EIDHR has overall proven to be "fit for purpose". In particular, with its wide and comprehensive scope, the EIDHR has remained an enabling, flexible and responsive instrument to protect and promote human rights and democracy worldwide. It has been able so far to address both well-identified and emerging human rights and democracy challenges, even in the most difficult environments – confirming that EIDHR remains very relevant for the political priorities of the EU.
2. Compared to the 2007-2013 EIDHR, the refined definition of the five specific objectives of the current EIDHR has improved its internal coherence and consistency and helped address the main problems identified, allowing to better focus on the most vulnerable groups and on the most pressing and emerging human rights and democracy challenges.
3. The fact that a specific intervention logic as well as strategic and operational indicators to measure results were not in place at instrument level in 2014 makes it difficult to measure effectiveness and impact of the EIDHR over the medium to long-term. It is particularly difficult to measure the direct contribution of the instrument to any overall improvement – or absence of deterioration – of the human rights and democracy situation worldwide. A new set of indicators is currently being developed in order to be able to be aggregated at instrument level.
4. Nevertheless, at output level, there is evidence that the EIDHR is largely on track to deliver on its objectives and commitments and is already effectively delivering results on each of its specific objectives. It is deemed generally efficient and responsive thanks to a relatively low level of administrative expenditure and in-built flexibility. The latter is however not always used to its full extent at Delegation level. The call for proposals process which is the norm to select projects is however considered lengthy, burdensome and over-competitive by the applicants from among the civil society organisations.
5. The instrument's worldwide mandate and broad thematic scope reflect the universality and indivisibility of human rights and actually contribute to its effectiveness. Shall EIDHR's scope be limited, it might lose its ability to address most pressing human rights situation and complementarity with other instruments and programmes.
6. The election observation activities play a key role in promoting democratic elections through offering impartial assessment and constructive recommendations which can be followed up by national stakeholders, including civil society organisations.
7. Support to democracy and human rights is also provided under other EU External Financing Instruments, but the specific features and added value of the EIDHR make it a "niche" instrument, able to operate where the others do not or cannot, as well as at a different level through civil society.
8. In times of decreasing overall funding available to civil society organisations operating in the fields of human rights and democracy worldwide, the EIDHR is able to fill in gaps, add value, and complement support provided by Member States and other development partners.

9. The EIDHR creates space for political and democratic dialogue. It does not only significantly contribute to the ability of civil society to advocate for reforms and change from within their societies, it also provides Commission services, the EEAS and EU Delegations with considerable input into their political and other dialogues with partner countries.

ANNEX 1. EVALUATION QUESTIONS

Relevance	To what extent do the overall objectives (EIDHR Regulation, Article 1), the specific objectives and priorities (EIDHR Regulation, Annex) and the design of the EIDHR respond to: (i) EU priorities and beneficiary needs identified at the time the instrument was adopted (2014)? (ii) Current EU priorities and beneficiary needs, given the evolving challenges and priorities in the international context (2017)?
Effectiveness, impact and sustainability	To what extent does the EIDHR deliver results against the instrument's objectives, and specific EU priorities?
Efficiency	To what extent is the EIDHR delivering efficiently?
Added value	To what extent do the EIDHR programmes add value compared to interventions by Member States and other Key Donors?
Coherence, consistency, complementarity and synergies	To what extent does the EIDHR facilitate coherence, consistency, complementarity and synergies both internally between its own set of objectives and programmes and vis-à-vis other EFIs?
Leverage	To what extent has the EIDHR leveraged political or policy engagement?

ANNEX 2. PROCEDURAL INFORMATION

The external evaluation of the EIDHR started in July 1st 2016. The Final report was received on 20 June 2017, on schedule.

The EIDHR Evaluation reference group, from hereinafter called Inter-service Steering Group (ISSG), which provided oversight of the external evaluation, comprised of a number of Commission services and EEAS..

The external evaluation of the EIDHR was managed by the ISSG through the following steps – Inception Report (how the evaluation design will deliver the information required), Desk Report (initial responses to evaluation questions), visits to Israel, Palestine, Peru and Uganda to meet key interlocutors to obtain first-hand view in-country, country desk studies on Pakistan and Russia, a survey covering all instruments, an Open Public Consultation on the draft report which comprised a specific 12-week online survey and targeted meetings with Member States and a Member of the European Parliament in March 2017, key messages, and Final reports.

There were 7 ISSG meetings over the course of the EIDHR external evaluation to cover initial briefing, provide feedback on inception, desk, key messages, draft Final, and Final reports. There were also four meetings (2 in September 2016, 1 in December 2016 and 1 end of March 2017) of all the consultants with all the evaluation managers, and relevant EU staff to promote understanding and exchange on complementarity and synergy between instruments under evaluation.

Information/data used in the EIDHR external evaluation is drawn from a comprehensive document review including all relevant regulations (EIDHR, Financial Regulation, CIR) as well as all other external financing instruments; international covenants and conventions; programming documents; European Commission Communications, staff working documents and key policy documents; the 2011 impact assessment of the 2007-2013 EIDHR Regulation and all available evaluations in the period 2007-2016; Annual Reports, Electoral Observation Reports, Activity Reports, Result Oriented Monitoring Reports, and strategic and management plans; budget documents; publications of key partners; publications and reports of external stakeholders (such as Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch) and development partners; and an assessment of all actions funded under the EIDHR in the period 2011-2013 and 2014 to January 2017. This internally held data reflects the best available data of this service. In addition, information was collected through interviews with key internal and external interlocutors. A number of project evaluations – commission by the EU - were also reviewed.

The EIDHR external evaluation was commissioned to provide the main information for this SWD evaluation. The ISG quality assessed the external evaluation as satisfactory at their meeting of 4 July 2017.

ANNEX 3. SYNOPSIS REPORT OF THE STAKEHOLDERS' CONSULTATION

The consultation strategy provided by the external consultants was intended to make the evaluation as participatory as possible. As further elaborated in the table below, the strategy consisted primarily of face-to-face interviews, emailed questions, telephone and Skype interviews with:

- EU management and staff at headquarters level.
- EU Delegation management and staff in selected countries.
- EU stakeholders (EU Parliament and its Committees).
- Beneficiaries and partners at international level and in sample countries.
- Those responsible for the Chapeau contract, EFI evaluation teams, and the team conducting the EOM and CIR evaluations.
- Member States and key Development Partners at international level and in sample countries.
- External stakeholders including UN Agencies, INGOs and other organisations at international level and in sample countries.

In addition:

- Those responsible for the Chapeau contract distributed a survey questionnaire to all EUDs and shared the results with the evaluation team.
- An open public consultation process was conducted from 7 February to 3 May 2017 and involved the publication of all draft evaluation reports of all EFIs online and a request for comments from members of the public; organisations and associations; research and academic institutions; industry, business or workers' organisations; public authorities; European platforms, networks or associations; and anyone. Comments were invited around four set questions on the EIDHR (with the last being open-ended and allowing any additional comments to be made) and an additional question included for comments on any of the other EFIs. A total of 71 organisations and individuals responded to all or some of the questions posed.
- A technical workshop with representatives of the European Parliament and Member States on 27 March 2017 to solicit feedback on the Draft Report.
- A face-to-face meeting was held with a Member of the European Parliament and her staff on 28 March 2017.

The table below illustrates who was consulted, for what reason, how, and at which stage in the process.

The Open Public Consultation (OPC) took place between February 7th and May 3rd 2017. This was an online survey and targeted meetings. The results of the OPC have been included in the body of the external evaluation report, where appropriate.

A total of 71 organisations and individuals responded to all or some of the questions posed in the online survey. Overall, there is generally consensus that the EIDHR is relevant and is addressing its objectives. Predictably, most organisations focused on the 'relevance' of the EIDHR from the perspective of whether or not it is relevant to the human rights and democracy issues as seen from their perspective and called for increases in support to their own specific areas of focus. As a result, numerous comments suggested an increase in focus on particular issues, including gender equality, child rights, persons with disabilities, human rights defenders, social and economic or labour rights, or on an increased focus on their country of origin. Also, civil society organisations showed some resistance to EOMs (and, in one case, support to international organisations) under the assumption that Objective 4 (i.e. EOMs) was reducing the amount of funding available to them. All public authorities that responded believed the EIDHR to be relevant, fit for purpose, aligned with EU policies and priorities and able to address human rights and democracy challenges. Most agreed that it is flexible and responsive and adds value to the support provided by Member States and other development partners. One confirmed that monitoring and evaluation needs to be improved by finalising the indicators and one raised concerns about the level of consultation with Member States.

The majority of respondents focused on implementation issues rather than on the instrument itself. Although the evaluation is really at instrument level, the external evaluation also dealt with implementation issues and the OPC confirmed some of the issues already raised in the draft report. In particular in this regard, it was noted that understanding amongst some beneficiaries of what the rules actually mean is limited at times and more might be done to ensure that these are properly understood. Both larger non-governmental organisations and Member States called for more consultation when it comes to setting priorities. Concerns were also expressed around the need for an increase in the EIDHR budget to counter the fact that some development partners, notably the USA, are reducing funding to civil society.

In addition to the comments received online, evaluation teams held a technical workshop with representatives of the European Parliament and Member States on 27 March 2017. Comments received during the workshop included the need for the report to include more of a focus on measuring effectiveness and impact, and even for an evaluation of support under the previous EIDHR. However, this was beyond the scope of the current, instrument-level evaluation (and beyond what is required by the consultants' terms of reference). There was also a suggestion, in line with recommendations in the external evaluation report, that the language used in the CIR could be simplified to make the level of flexibility created clearer to EU Delegations staff.

The team leader for the evaluation also met with a Member of the European Parliament on 28 March 2017 to discuss the relevance of the EIDHR, its responsiveness to new and changing EU priorities and evolving human rights and democracy challenges, the visibility of support to CSOs, and how to make the EIDHR more effective and responsive to the needs of CSOs.
