1. Summary and conclusions

- 1.1 The Commission uses rail transport statistics to assess the effects of Community initiatives taken in the railway ambit and to facilitate, if required, the preparation of new initiatives.
- 1.2 These statistics have been compiled – in part at first and then in greater detail – since 1980¹. In 2003, a new piece of legislation, Regulation EC No 91/2003 (known as the original instrument), introduced substantive amendments and additions. Since then, the Member States have been required to collect and submit annual, quarterly or five-yearly statistics on the carriage of goods and passengers, on the basis of specified indicators.
- 1.3 In the meantime, that original instrument has been amended and supplemented by Regulations Nos 1192/2003, 219/2009 and 2016/2032, the result being that a large number of provisions are now dispersed – some in the original instrument, some in the subsequent amending legislation.
- 1.4 The Commission has sought merely to effect a "codification", merging the substance of the various earlier regulations unchanged into a harmonious and coherent whole. The only exception is the deletion of paragraph 5 of Article 4 of Regulation No 91/2003, which gave the Commission the right to adapt non-essential elements of the regulation's annexes at its discretion.
- 1.5 In keeping with the goal of regulatory fitness (REFIT), the EESC supports the Commission's initiative. It wonders, however, whether the data in question could not be better handled and incorporated into other data on this matter collected by Eurostat.
